SOCIAL SWIM AT THE CAPITAL

(Tribune Special Correspondence.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20.—The most prominent woman in Washington during the week just past has been Miss Susan B. Anthony. Her pathway has been strewn with ovations and American Beauties. Socially, as well as in her professional capacity, has this veteran reformer, with her gentle, spirituelle face, been holding the center of the stage.

Within the same week Miss Anthony and Miss Roosevelt both celebrated a birthday. There's just sixty-four years difference in the ages of these two vital, contented women. "We have both turned twenty," said sweet Alice, making a wry face. "It's beautiful to be eighty-four," said Miss Anthony, with the myrtle radiance of the westerner sun lighting her fine features, "especially when it comes to the celebration of a birthday that is one of her characteristics—where one is eighty-four years young!"

These two, standing each at one of life's fair extremities, unconsciously made a pretty tableau together the other night at the White house. Miss Anthony, an honored guest in the blue room, wearing a little of the glitter and hubbub had slipped off into the adjoining red room, practically empty, and seated herself on one of the criterion sofas. She was like an old picture, her snowy hair smoothed down quaintly over her ears. She wore a claret colored velvet of wonderful tone and quality that made no attempt toward mediocrity. About her shoulders and under was disposed her celebrated fish of rose point lace, one of the rarest specimens ever seen at the White House.

Swirling toward the sofa, like a happy, young girl, came Miss Alice, who, in the incarnation of youth and innocence. She had forgotten her flowers, a monster bouquet of red and white roses tied with broad sashes of red and white ribbon, and she had forgotten to bring her hat, and she had forgotten to bring her gloves, and she had forgotten to bring her shoes, and she had forgotten to bring her bag, and she had forgotten to bring her keys, and she had forgotten to bring her watch, and she had forgotten to bring her pocket square, and she had forgotten to bring her handkerchief, and she had forgotten to bring her gloves, and she had forgotten to bring her shoes, and she had forgotten to bring her bag, and she had forgotten to bring her keys, and she had forgotten to bring her watch, and she had forgotten to bring her pocket square, and she had forgotten to bring her handkerchief, and she had
